

INDO-ASIATISCHE ZEITSCHRIFT

11

MITTEILUNGEN DER
GESELLSCHAFT FÜR INDO-ASIATISCHE KUNST
BERLIN
2007

The Identification of Kizil Paintings II

Monika Zin

Zusammenfassung: Der vorliegende Artikel ist der zweite aus der angekündigten Reihe, die zur Identifizierung der narrativen Malereien in den buddhistischen Klöstern in Kizil beitragen soll.¹⁾ Der vorliegende Aufsatz gibt zuerst die Identifizierung eines rätselhaften Bildes (Fig. 3), das ein Wesen mit zwei Köpfen wiederzugeben scheint, als die Darstellung der Geschichte vom Knaben Sudāya, der im Grab geboren wurde und sich von der Milch seiner verstorbenen Mutter ernährte. Der zweite Teil des Artikels bringt die Identifizierung einer Reihe von Bildern, die einen Mann beim Waschen der Füße des Buddha zeigt; der Mann ist in allen Bildern durch Töpfe charakterisiert. Die in tocharischer Sprache erhaltene Erzählung von dem Töpfer Brhaddyuti bildet die literarische Quelle dieser Malerei.

This paper is the second in a series which discusses the identification of hitherto unrecognized narrative paintings in the Buddhist monasteries in Kizil in Chinese Central Asia. The preceding paper looked at depictions of the stories of Yaśa and of Mākandika (ZIN 2005).

3. Sudāya²⁾

This is the story of a boy whose mother was dead when she gave birth to him in a tomb. The story was first identified in the reliefs of Gandhara by Alfred FOUCHER (1917: 260-271) and it is known from two versions preserved in Chinese translation, *T 518*³⁾ and T 683.⁴⁾ The version found in T 518, “the Sūtra spoken by the Buddha to the king of the country Caṇḍavant”, was translated by CHAVANNES (1921: 128-135). It may be summarized in the following way: As a result of a plot by the jealous wives of king Tchan-t'o-yue, the king's youngest wife is killed and buried in a tomb. In the tomb she gives birth to a son; half of her body does not decay and the child feeds on milk from one of her breasts. When the boy is three years old the tomb collapses and the boy is able to climb out of

1) Teil I, mit der Identifizierung der Geschichten von dem Jüngling Yaśa und dem Brahmenen Mākandika, erschien in Nr. 9 der Indo-Asiatischen Zeitschrift (2005: 23-36)

2) I wish to express my gratitude to my student Mr. Zhan LIU for providing me with Chinese references mentioned in fns. 5-8.

3) T 518 (Tchan t'o yue kouo wang king), ed. Vol. 14, pp. 791c-792b.

4) T 683 (Tchou tö fou t'ein king) Sarvagunapuṇyakṣetrasūtra, ed. Vol. 16, Chap. 1, pp. 777c-778a.

it. During the day, the child plays with birds and wild animals and at night he returns to the tomb. When the boy is six years old, the Buddha thinks of him and goes to the tomb where the two have a short conversation. During the talk the boy expresses his willingness to follow the Buddha and the Buddha strokes the boy's head. At this moment the boy, whose name is Siu-t'o, loses his hair and a monk's kāṣāya appears on his body. Siu-t'o receives the Buddha's teaching and after a mere seven days achieves the sainthood of the arhat. Soon the Buddha sends Siu-t'o to King Tchan-t'o-yue, who is the boy's father. When the young monk stands in front of the king, Tchan-t'o-yue tells him of his great sadness: his kingdom does not have a heir. Siu-t'o tells the king about the Buddha's great wisdom and on hearing this the king, his court and a crowd of followers go to see the Buddha. When the king receives the Buddha's teaching and becomes a lay disciple, the Buddha reveals that Siu-t'o is in fact the king's son born in a tomb from the dead queen.

The version in T 683 (FOUCHER 1917: 280n) is shorter; it tells the story of a queen who died as the result of an illness and of a boy who was born in a tomb. The boy's name here is Siu-t'o-ye and he spends seven years in the tomb. This version does not mention that one part of the queen's body does not decay, nor does it refer to the boy losing his hair after the Buddha strokes it.

It is evident that the story about a boy in a tomb must have been quite well known because there are frequent literary references to the boy's name.⁵⁾ Sometimes these include explicit references to his story; in T 1442 Siu-t'o-ye is a naked child looking for some clothes,⁶⁾ in T 1861 the Buddha asks if the boy has a home and the boy loses his hair,⁷⁾ and T 1821, T 1822 and T 1823 refer to a seven-year-old boy.⁸⁾ However, the whole story is not found anywhere else nor, to the best of my knowledge, is it known in Sanskrit, Pali or Tibetan. The name of the boy in Sanskrit would be Sudāya, Sudāyi or Sudāna (Sudhāna).

FOUCHER described three reliefs from Gandhara; one of them is to be found in the present paper as Fig. 1.⁹⁾ His other examples (FOUCHER 1917: 260n) were a poorly preserved relief in the Museum of Ethnography in Berlin and a water-colour by Berezovski which was based on a mural painting in Kucha (Fig. 2)¹⁰⁾, seen there during the Russian expedition to Turkestan in the years 1909-10.

Since FOUCHER's time further Gandharan reliefs have been found. DE MARCO in his work on funerary monuments (1987: 199-219) lists and describes 15 reliefs of the dead mother in the tomb,

5) T 1451 (Ken pen chou yi ts'ie yeou p'i nai ye tsa che; Mūlasarvāstivāda-Vinayakṣudrakavastu), ed. Vol. 24, Chap. 16, p. 282a; T 1457 (Ken pen chou yi ts'ie yeou pou pi tch'ou ni kiai king), ed. Vol. 24, Chap. 1, p. 521c.

6) T 1442 (Ken pen chou yi ts'ie yeou pou nai ye; Mūlasarvāstivāda-Vinayavibhaṅga), ed. Vol. 23, Chap. 4, pp. 646c-647a.

7) T 1861 (Ta tch'eng fa yuan yi lin tch'ang), ed. Vol. 45, Chap. 3, p. 304a; p. 308b.

8) T 1821 (Kiu chö louen ki; Comm. to Abhidharmakośa), ed. Vol. 41, Chap. 14, p. 222b-c; T 1822 (Kiu chö louen chou; Comm. to Abhidharmakośa), ed. Vol. 41, Chap. 14, p. 643c; T 1823 (Kiu chö louen song louen pen; Comm. to Abhidharmakośa), ed. Vol. 41, Chap. 14, p. 897c.

9) Ill.: FOUCHER 1917: pl. 1.2; DE MARCO 1987: fig. 4; ZWALF 1996: fig. 225.

10) Ill.: OLDENBURG 1914: 68, fig. 59; FOUCHER 1917: pl. 2.2.

and he gives illustrations of 13 of them. The reliefs depict a roofed tomb (shown as a little shrine), or portray a stūpa made of regular cubical stones. Both the shrines and the stūpas are depicted with an open entrance from which the dead body of the mother tumbles out. The woman's prominent shoulder bones and ribs make clear that she is dead. She always lies with her head to the front of the picture and her loose, long hair hangs down or is spread over the ground. The boy is shown near his mother holding and sucking one of her breasts, as he is depicted in the picture by Berezovski representing a fragment of the painting from Kucha. Among versions of the story which survive, the visual representations explicitly refer to the developed version in T 518, as they present the corpse of the mother in asymmetric decay with only one breast.

One of the rhomboidal paintings on the barrel vault in Cave 104 in Kizil depicts something rather odd, alongside a wholly conventionally portrayed Buddha (Fig. 3). Inside a white object,

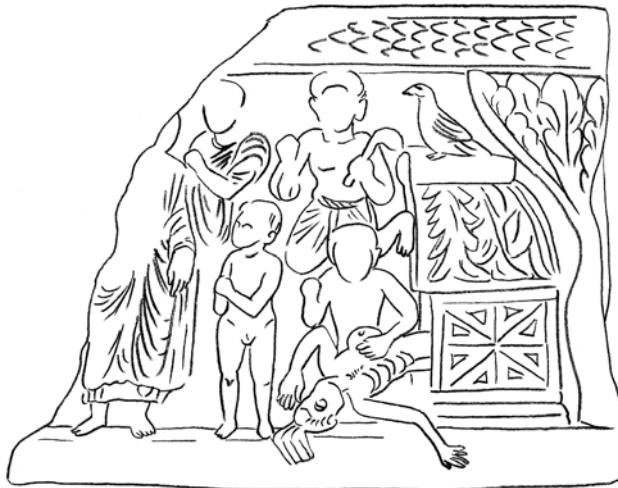

Fig. 1 Relief from Gandhara. London, British Museum, Acc.No. OA 1899.6-9.22

Fig. 2 Kizil, Cave ?. After Berezovski in OLDENBURG 1914: 68, fig. 59

Fig. 3 Kizil, Cave 104. After XU (et al.) 1983-85, Vol. 2, Fig. 100

Fig. 4a Drawing of a detail from Fig. 3

whose bottom is not visible and whose top has the form of a rounded peak, there is a shape which appears to be easily identified as a human body, simply from the selection of colours used to portray it. This is a false impression, however, as more detailed identification is far from easy, since “the body” has two heads. One of the heads is seen in profile in the highest point, the other one is seen en face but upside down in the lowest point. The lower head has long, unbound hair which cascades down and which is depicted as a smooth surface without marking locks or strands.

Thanks to the hair, the awkward shape can be identified as the iconographical element from the story about the boy feeding from the dead mother in the tomb. The shape depicted here is the mother's corpse with the face seen upside down and Sudāya kneeling on the left side, moving his mouth towards the breast which he holds in his hands. The dead mother and the boy are placed in a round hole in the stūpa. Even the layers of stones from which the stūpa is made are depicted in the painting. Without doubt, the central part of the Kizil painting, represented as the line drawing (Fig. 4a), and the line drawing of the crucial part of one of the reliefs from Gandhara (Fig. 4b)¹¹, depict one and the same story.

Fig. 4b Drawing of a detail from a Gandharan relief

4. Br̥haddhyuti

Among the rhomboidal scenes on the barrel vault of Cave 80 in Kizil the following scene is presented (Fig. 5): The Buddha is shown sitting on the throne in a ‘European’ manner with his legs together on one side. The Buddha holds his hands in a gesture which suggests that he is talking to or teaching a man who is kneeling on the right-hand side of the picture and who is holding his right hand in a similar gesture. In his left hand the man holds a vessel tilted in such a way that water pours directly onto the Buddha's feet from its spout. The man is dressed conventionally as a lay devotee; he does not wear a crown, so he is not a king; nor does he have a nimbus, so he is not a god. This scene, shown in The Grotto Art of China, is sub-titled “Rāhūla's Realization and his washing of the Buddha's feet”. This interpretation is unacceptable: Rāhula was a son of the Buddha, who became a monk in his childhood. The person depicted in the picture is neither a small boy nor an adult monk. Furthermore, there is another iconographical element, with which the artist undoubtedly wanted to characterize the event or the person worshipping the Buddha. On the left-hand side, there is a vaulted chamber cluttered with pots, which is most probably a potter's kiln.

11) Ill.: DE MARCO 1987: fig. 13.

The same scene can be found three more times in the published paintings from Kizil; in Cave 38 (Fig. 6) the vault with the pots is placed behind the kneeling man and not on the other side of the Buddha. Also here, the man holds a vessel in his left hand while his right hand touches the Buddha. Undoubtedly, the picture in Cave 32 (Fig. 7) once showed exactly the same scene, although today the middle part with the man's head and the vessel is missing. The state of preservation of the barrel vault in Cave 171 (Fig. 8) is even worse but here too it is easy to recognize that the same scene is represented – the only difference is that the pots are depicted standing in isolation, not in a vault.

The same scene was portrayed in Kizil in another place as a large painting, 1.60 m high, placed on the

Fig. 5 Kizil, Cave 80. After XU (et al.) 1983-85, Vol. 2, Fig. 62

Fig. 6 Kizil, Cave 38. After XU (et al.) 1983-85, Vol. 1, Fig. 115

Fig. 7 Kizil, Cave 32. After XU (et al.) 1983-85, Vol. 1, Fig. 76

Fig. 8 Kizil, Cave 171. After TAN (et al.) 1981, Vol. 2, Fig. 79

Fig. 9 Kizil, Cave 206.
After GRÜNWEDEL 1912: 160, Fig. 362

front wall of Cave 206, on the left of the entrance. The picture has not survived, but it is known from the drawing (Fig. 9) and description of GRÜNWEDEL.¹²⁾ The picture must have been very impressive since GRÜNWEDEL named the cave after it: In the terminology of the German Turfan expeditions, Cave 206 is referred to as the „Fußwaschungshöhle“, that is “The Foot Washing Cave”.¹³⁾

The scene in Cave 206 repeats the same scheme: The man kneeling at the feet of the Buddha holds a vessel in his left hand, while his right hand touches the feet of the Master sitting on the throne. The pots in the vault are placed behind the man. The large size of the painting allowed the artist to show further details: On the other side of the Buddha, Vajrapāṇi can be recognized, and above him we can see a worshipping god. Two more individuals stand between the man and the pots; GRÜNWEDEL suggested that these were both women but their gender cannot be determined from the drawing itself. The Buddha's feet are placed on a rolled-up piece of fabric. The vessel and the fabric under the feet support GRÜNWEDEL's interpretation, which can be applied to all the paintings in the series (Figs. 5-9), that what is shown here is the washing of the Buddha's feet. In all the scenes, the person washing the Buddha's feet is characterized by pots; furthermore, in most cases these are placed in the vault which may be a kiln. Therefore, the person washing the Buddha's feet is a potter.

The potter appears several times in the literary works that might serve as a basis for the paintings of Kizil. There is, for example, a story about the potter in which he brings his friend Brahmin to the Buddha.¹⁴⁾ In another story the potter is converted when the Buddha demonstrates that he can make

12) GRÜNWEDEL 1920: 159: „Türwand. Nur Türw. L. v. Eing. C hat noch ein Bild. In der Mitte sitzt der Buddha auf einem hohen Throne, neben ihm den Wedel schwingend und mit d. L. auf den Donnerkeil gestützt Vajrapāṇi. Vor Buddha kniet ein junger Mann, wie es scheint, ein König, welcher Buddhas Füße, welche auf einem zusammengerollten, weißen Tuche stehen, aus einem kleinen Fläschchen zu salben bemüht ist. Hinter ihm sieht man zwei Frauen, welche die Hände falten, die vordere, deren Kopf zerstört ist, scheint einen Schmuckgegenstand zu halten. Im Hintergr. ist ein Gewölbe mit vier großen Krügen, Fig. 362. Das Gold, mit dem einst Buddhas Gewand belegt war, ist abgekratzt.“

13) GRÜNWEDEL refers to the relief from Gandhara depicting the sitting Buddha, whose elevated foot is washed by a kneeling individual – the scene that was interpreted by FOUCHER (1905-51, Vol. 1: 459-464) as the Buddha's visit to Kapilavastu. Regardless of the fact that the above interpretation is uncertain, as it may also be the depiction of the doctor Jīvaka dressing the wounded toe of the Buddha (cf. ZIN 2006), the relief from Gandhara is irrelevant as a comparison with the paintings in Kizil, since it does not depict any pots, and these undoubtedly have an important iconographical character here.

14) Cf. the story of Ghaṭikāra and Jyotipāla (Jotipāla) in Majjhimanikāya LXXXI, ed. Vol. 2, pp. 45-54; transl. pp. 243-250; Mahāvastu, ed. Vol. 1, pp. 317-338; transl. pp. 265-285; for further references cf. transl. p. 267n.

pottery superior to anything the craftsman is able to produce.¹⁵⁾ As far as I am aware, however, none of these stories contains the scene with the washing of the Buddha's feet, which seems to be essential in the representations analysed here.

The textual tradition of the Mūlasarvāstivādavinaya preserved one more story about the potter. The story preserved in a Tibetan translation¹⁶⁾ describes the following events: One day in Vaiśālī the Buddha fell ill, so he sent Ānanda to the potter with the request that the potter give him some butter and oil. The potter (here without a name) fulfilled the request eagerly, and when he gave the gifts to the Buddha, expressed a desire to become the Buddha himself in future – Buddha Śākyamuni. The fact that the story includes the wish of the donor to achieve the state of the Buddha (prañidhāna) in the future, and the prophecy (vyākaraṇa) that the potter will be the Buddha Śākyamuni in the future, proves that the story was adapted from an older source since it should not have been included into the story of the life of Buddha Śākyamuni himself. This version is complemented by the motif of prañidhāna without paying any special attention to its logic.

A parallel to the story about the potter presenting the Buddha with gifts is also found in a Sanskrit version, and here even the potter's name is known. The Sanskrit version is preserved in the Mahajjātakamālā manuscripts found in Nepal. The potter's name is Brhaddyuti. The Brhaddyutikumbhakārāvadāna (Avadāna of the potter Brhaddyuti) in the *Mahajjātakamālā*¹⁷⁾ repeats the story from the Mūlasarvāstivādavinaya in metrical form. In the Mahajjātakamālā, the Buddha, during an illness, sends Ānanda to ask the potter for help and gifts of butter, oil, sugar and water.¹⁸⁾ The potter comes with his son and wife bringing the gifts; he rubs the body of the Buddha with butter and oil and sprinkles it with sweet water.¹⁹⁾ Afterwards he expresses the wish that he become the Buddha himself with the name Śākyamuni, while his son becomes Ānanda and his wife Yaśodharā.²⁰⁾

15) Mūlasarvāstivādavinaya, ed. DUTT, Vol. 3.1, pp. XVII-2, cf. STRONG 1992: 23-37 (with references).

16) Tib. Mūlasarvāstivādavinaya, Bhaiṣajyavastu, ed. Vol. 41, 221.5.2, analys. PANGLUNG 1981: 50.

17) Mahajjātakamālā IV, ed. pp. 49-57; trad. LANG 1912: 530-535.

18) Mahajjātakamālā IV.86-88, ed. p. 55: bṛhaddyute vijāñīyā bhagavato jagadguroḥ/ yad vātābādhitaṁ glānyam utpannaṁ vigrāhe 'dhunā// tad vātaśāntaye śāstuḥ sarpistailaguḍāmbubhiḥ/ prayojanam̄ tad etāni yācitum aham āvraje//; trad. LANG 1912: 534: « ‘Apprends, ô Brhaddyuti! que le Bienheureux, Guru du monde, souffre en ce moment dans son corps d'une maladie des vents qui l'abat. Pour calmer la maladie du Maître il faut du beurre fondu, de l'huile, du sucre et de l'eau, et voilà ce que je viens te demander ...’ »

19) Mahajjātakamālā IV.96-97, ed. p. 56: suprasannam̄ munīndram̄ tam̄ matvā sa kumbhakṛṇ mudā/ tailena sarpiṣā śāstuḥ sarvāṅge 'mraksayat svayam// guḍodakena sarvāṅge paryasiñcat samādarāt/ tad guḍāmbu ca pānāya pradadau sampramoditaḥ//; trad. LANG 1912: 534: « Le potier comprit que le prince des Munis lui était favorable et joyeusement lui-même lui frotta tout le corps avec le beurre et l'huile. Avec l'eau sucrée il l'aspergea sur tout le corps en lui témoignant le plus profond respect, lui en donna aussi à boire, et son âme était joyeuse. »

20) Mahajjātakamālā IV.106-111, ed. pp. 56-57: evam sa prañidhiṁ kṛtvā samutthāya pramoditaḥ/ bhagavantam̄ samīkṣyaiva tatraikānta upāśrayat// tataḥ sa bhagavān dharmam̄ samādiśya jagaddhite/ anyajjanapade gantum̄ pracacārā sasāṅghikāḥ// tataḥ sa kumbhakāro 'pi sadā tam̄ sugataṁ smaran/ kāle dehaṁ parityajya divi gatvā mudācarat// tathā tasyātmajo bhāryā smṛtvā tam̄ sugataṁ sadā/ kāle dehaṁ parityajya divi gatvā prarematuh// evam sa bhagavān ādau kumbhakāraḥ purā bhave/ śākyamuniṁ samabharyarcya sambodhiprañidhiṁ vyadhāt//

The Sanskrit version of the story about the potter in the Mahajātakamālā introduces the motif of rubbing the Buddha's body with butter and sprinkling it with water. The version preserved in the Tocharian language²¹⁾ is in this respect more developed and it introduces the element of the washing of the Buddha which is depicted in the paintings of Kizil.

In the surviving fragments of Tocharian manuscripts a similar situation is represented: the Buddha is ill and he sends Ānanda to the potter Br̥haddyuti. However, the reason for the request is different here: The Buddha wants to have some hot water (possibly for a bath) and sesame oil (possibly for a massage).²²⁾ Br̥haddyuti is extremely happy and with great pleasure goes with all his family to give his presents to the Buddha.²³⁾ When Br̥haddyuti arrives, he is enchanted by the view of the Buddha and takes him by the feet asking for permission to touch and bathe him.²⁴⁾ As soon as the Buddha agrees, Br̥haddyuti realizes how ridiculous his request is – how can he, whose potter's hands are hard and rough, touch the delicate and golden skin of the Buddha?²⁵⁾ At this moment a miracle happens and the cold, hard hands of Br̥haddyuti turn into delicate hands with silk-like skin.²⁶⁾ yo 'sau br̥haddyutir nāma kulālo 'yam muniśvaraḥ/ yo 'sau tadātmajaś cābhūd ānando 'yam mahāmatih/ yā ca tasya satī bhāryā sābhūd devī yaśodharā//; trad. LANG 1912: 534-535: « Il fit ce vœu, se releva plein de joie, et, les yeux dirigés vers le Bienheureux, s'installa de côté. Alors le Bienheureux ayant prêché la loi pour le bien du monde s'en fut avec sa communauté dans une autre contrée. De son côté le potier se souvenant toujours du Bienheureux, le temps venu, ayant quitté son corps, gagna le ciel et s'y réjouit. Son fils et sa femme se souvenant toujours du Bienheureux, le temps venu, ayant quitté leur corps, gagnèrent le ciel et s'y réjouirent. C'est ainsi que le Bienheureux, sous la forme d'un potier, rendit jadis hommage à Čākyamuni et pria pour obtenir l'illumination totale. Celui qui était le potier Vṛhaddyuti, c'est ce prince des Munis; et celui qui était son fils, c'est Ānanda que voici, le grand sage. Celle qui était sa vertueuse épouse, c'est la reine Yaśodharā. »

21) SIEG 1944: 23-30.

22) Ibid. p.25: „Ānanda spricht: „Er ist nämlich folgendermaßen: der Erhabene, der auf die Weise Gekommene [Tathāgata], der Arhat, der alle Dharmas richtig insgesamt Kennende (...) Den buddhaschaftlichen (Körper) des Arhat quält jetzt, wenn er (seines Weges) geht, Erkrankung durch den Wind. Auf Grund dessen verlangt er nach warmem Wasser und Sesamöl ...““

23) Ibid. pp. 25-26: „Darauf ging Br̥haddyuti, der Töpfer, mit Vater, Mutter und Brüdern, mit Weib und Kindern zusammen, nachdem er Parfüm, Blume[n], warmes Wasser und Sesamöl (geholt) hatte, wo Śākyamuni, der Buddha, der Göttergott war.“

24) Ibid. p. 27: „Wenn, o Arhat, einer wie ich würdig wäre, (Deinen) leuchtenden ... (Körper) zu berühren, möchte ich die Erlaubnis [dazu] erhalten, mit eigener Hand möchte ich den Buddha baden. Du, der du den [deinen] Wunsch erfüllenden [ihren] Wunsch gewährst (erlaube es mir(?))“.

25) Ibid. p. 27: „(Darauf) spricht mit (lieblicher) Stimme Śākyamuni, der Buddha: „Tue so, mein Sohn, bade du selbst des Buddha Körper“. (Als nun Br̥haddyuti), der Töpfer, von dem Buddha die Erlaubnis bekommen hatte und voll Freude an den Buddha herantrat (?), sah er (seine Hände) ..., die durch die Bearbeitung des Tones rauen, harten, trockenen, tonigen, kalten und nicht geeigneten an den Körper des Buddha zu rühren. Sofort wich er mit Scheu zurück (...).“

26) Ibid. p. 28: „(Sofort) ging (dem Br̥haddyuti) auf die Bezeugung der großen Freude an dem Glanze des Buddha, des Meisters, und auf das Machen großmächtiger ... an [seinen] Händen die Trockenheit und Kälte verloren und wie Seiden(-Gewebe[?]) weiche, zarte (Hände) kamen ihm zum Vorschein.“

After bathing the Buddha, Br̥haddyuti feels that he would like to become the Buddha in the future. He expresses the pranidhāna to become the Buddha called Śākyamuni in the future.²⁷⁾

The paintings in Kizil appear to depict this story. What is undoubtedly shown in them is the story of the potter worshipping the Buddha by washing him. It should not be surprising that it is only the washing of the Buddha's feet that is depicted, not the entire bathing scene, as it would have been unthinkable to depict the Buddha naked. An old Sanskrit version of the story of Br̥haddyuti, which most probably did not include pranidhāna, has not been preserved, thus it is not known if it included the motif of bathing the Buddha and the miracle of the soft hands, which is nowadays known only from the Tocharian version. However, the fact that the potter's feet washing is depicted only in the paintings in Central Asia and not in any other Buddhist school of art seems to allow for further speculations and an assumption that the artists from Kizil depicted a local Tocharian version. The fact that so many of these pictures exist indicate that the story of Br̥haddyuti was very popular. The story of a craftsman with hard hands, who was allowed to worship the Buddha, is an appealing image, with which many visitors of the monasteries in Kizil identified themselves.

List of paintings under discussion

Sudāya

- Cave 104, vault, left side; ill.: XU (et al.) 1983-85, Vol. 2, Fig. 100 (supra, Fig. 3)

Br̥haddyuti

- Cave 32, vault; ill.: XU (et al.) 1983-85, Vol. 1, Fig. 76 (supra, Fig. 7)
- Cave 38 (Musikerhöhle), vault, right side; ill.: XU (et al.) 1983-85, Vol. 1, Fig. 115 (supra, Fig. 6)
- Cave 80 (Höllentopfhöhle), vault, right side; ill.: XU (et al.) 1983-85, Vol. 2, Fig. 62 (supra, Fig. 5)
- Cave 171, vault, right side; ill.: XU (et al.) 1983-85, Vol. 3, Fig. 5; TAN (et al.) 1981, Vol. 2, Fig. 79 (supra, Fig. 8)
- Cave 206 (Fußwaschungshöhle), front wall, left side; ill: GRÜNWEDEL 1912: 160, Fig. 362 (supra, Fig. 9)

27) Ibid. pp. 28-29: „Nachdem alsdann Br̥haddyuti dem Buddha Śākyamuni die Ehrung des (Badens) erwiesen und den Buddha, den Meister, als [dieselbe] annehmend und günstig [an]erkennend erkannt hatte, fiel er mit seinem ganzen Körper vor dem Körper des Buddha, des Meisters, auf den Bauch und [seinen] überaus starken Wunsch nach der Buddhaschaft (vorbringend, spricht er: (...), Durch diesen guten Dienst, durch diese Hingabe, möchte mir dieser mein Wunsch (bestimmt) in Erfüllung gehen, (ich möchte sein ein Lehrer (?)) in der Welt. Ich möchte jedermanns Schutz sein in ebensolchen Jahren, in ebensolchem ... in ebensolchem Geschlecht als Buddha (mit Namen Śākyamuni). Mein Vater sei der König namens Śuddhodana, meine Mutter Mahāmāyā mit Namen, (meine Gattin) Yaśodharā (?) (mit Namen). Mein Sohn Rāhula mit Namen, Ānanda mein Diener, Sāriputra und Maugalyāyana seien mein vornehmstes Schülerpaar.““

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Mahajātakamālā*, ed. HAHN, M., Der große Legendenkranz (Mahajātakamālā). Eine mittelalterliche buddhistische Legenden Sammlung aus Nepal = Asiatische Forschungen, 88, Wiesbaden, 1985.
- Mahāvastu*, ed. SENART, É., 1-3, Société Asiatique, Paris, 1882-97; transl. JONES, J.J., Sacred Books of the Buddhists, 16, 18, 19, London, 1949-56.
- Majjhimanikāya*, ed. TRENCKNER, V. / CHALMERS, R., 1-3, PTS, London, 1888-99, transl. HORNER, I.B., The Collection of the Middle Length Sayings, 1-3, PTS, London, 1954-59.
- Mūlasarvāstivādavinyaya*, Sanskrit: ed. (extr.) in: DUTT, N., Gilgit Manuscripts, 3.1-4, Srinagar, 1947-50.
- T = Taishō Shinshū Daizōkyō, ed. TAKAKUSU, J. / WATANABE, K. / ONO, B., Tokyo, 1924ff.

* * *

- CHAVANNES, É., 1921, Contes et Légendes du Bouddhisme Chinois, Paris.
- DE MARCO, G., 1987, The Stūpa as a Funerary Monument: New Iconographical Evidence, in: East and West, 37, Rome, pp. 191-246.
- FOUCHER, A., 1905-51, L'art gréco-bouddhique du Gandhāra, Étude sur les origines de l'influence classique dans l'art bouddhique de l'Inde et de l'Extrême-Orient, 1-2, Paris.
- FOUCHER, A., 1917, Interprétation de quelques bas-reliefs du Gandhāra, in: Journal Asiatique, Sér. 11, Vol. 9, pp. 257-281.
- GRÜNWEDEL, A., 1912, Altbuddhistische Kultstätten in Chinesisch-Turkistan, Königlich Preussische Turfan Expeditionen, Berlin.
- LANG, M.E., 1912, La Mahajātakamālā, in: Journal Asiatique, Sér. 10, Vol. 19, pp. 511-550.
- OLDENBURG, S.F., 1914, Russkaya Turkmestanskaya Ekspedicija, 1909-10, Vol. 1, St. Petersburg.
- PANGLUNG, J.L., 1981, Die Erzählstoffe des Mūlasarvāstivāda-Vinaya, Analysiert auf Grund der Tibetischen Übersetzung = Studia Philologica Buddhica, Monograph Series, 3, Tokyo.
- SIEG, E., 1944, Übersetzungen aus dem Tocharischen I = Abhandlungen der Preußischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, Jahrgang 1943, Phil.-hist. Klasse, Nr.16, Berlin.
- STRONG, J.S., 1992, The Legend and Cult of Upagupta, Sanskrit Buddhism in North India and Southeast Asia, Princeton.
- TAN, Shutong (et al.), 1981, Murals for Xinjiang, The Thousand-Buddha Caves at Kizil, 1-2, Tokyo.
- XU, Wanyin (et al.), 1983-85, The Kizil Grottoes, 1-3 = The Grotto Art of China, Tokyo.
- ZIN, M., 2005, The Identification of Kizil Paintings I, in: Indo-Asiatische Zeitschrift, 9, Berlin, pp. 23-36.
- ZIN, M., 2006, About Two Rocks in the Buddha's Life Story, in: East and West, 56/4, Rome (in press).
- ZWALF, W., 1996, A Catalogue of the Gandhāra Sculpture in the British Museum, London.

Indo-Asiatische Zeitschrift
Mitteilungen der Gesellschaft für indo-asiatische Kunst

11 · 2007

Inhalt / Contents

Vorwort des Vorsitzenden der Gesellschaft für indo-asiatische Kunst	4
Abgewickelt – Das Museum für Indische Kunst verliert seine Eigenständigkeit Dietrich Mahlo	5
“Magic Worlds of Gods Enhanced”. New South Asian Sculptural Highlights in the Permanent Exhibition of the Asian Art Museum, Berlin Corinna Wessels-Mevissen	8
Eine ungewöhnliche Darstellung des Śiva als Bezwinger des Andhaka im Museum für Asiatische Kunst, Berlin Gudrun Melzer	19
Bemerkungen zu den „Turfan-Akten“ Caren Dreyer	33
The Identification of Kizil Paintings II Monika Zin	43
Details am Rande. Anmerkungen zum Zusammenhang von Maṇḍala-Abbildungen und Raumordnung buddhistischer Tempel in Ladakh Gerald Kozicz	53
Die Tshag'li der Sammlung des Völkerkundemuseums in Heidelberg Peggy Valente de Andrade	63

Delightful Gardens and Picturesque Views
Raffael Dedo Gadebusch	77
Zwischen Indomanie und Indophobie. Aspekte der frühen Indien-Fotografie im Kontext kolonialer Weltaneignung
Regina Höfer	88
The “Gardens of Paradise” of the Mughal Garden-Tombs at Agra in Early Photographs (1855-65) and Descriptions II
Joachim K. Bautze	102
Nachruf Gerd-Wolfgang Essen	115
Autoren / Authors	116
Indo-Asiatische Zeitschrift 1 (1997) – 10 (2006): Autoren- und Titelindex /
Authors’ and Title Index	117
Ausstellungskalender / Exhibitions Calendar	120
Mitglieder der Gesellschaft für indo-asiatische Kunst	122

IMPRESSUM

Indo-Asiatische Zeitschrift. Mitteilungen der Gesellschaft für indo-asiatische Kunst, ISSN 1434-8829

© 2007 Gesellschaft für indo-asiatische Kunst Berlin e.V., Webseite: <http://www.giak.org>

Redaktion und Herausgabe: Raffael Dedo Gadebusch, Dr. Dietrich Mahlo, Gerd J.R. Mevissen

Bezugsadresse: Museum für Asiatische Kunst, Kunstsammlung Süd-, Südost- und Zentralasien, Takustraße 40, D-14195 Berlin, Tel. (030) 8301-361, Fax (030) 8301-502,

E-mail: mik@smb.spk-berlin.de, Webseite: <http://www.smb.museum/aku>

Die Indo-Asiatische Zeitschrift erscheint jährlich zum Jahresende. Mitglieder erhalten die Publikation kostenlos, für Nichtmitglieder beträgt der Preis EUR 13,00, bei Doppelnummern EUR 22,00.

Beiträge sind willkommen und an die oben genannte Adresse zu richten.

Konzept, Satz und Layout: Gerd J.R. Mevissen; Gesamtherstellung und Druck: Reiter-Druck, Berlin
Umschlagabbildung:

Jina Rṣabhanātha, Messing mit Einlage, Gujarat, 8. Jh. n.Chr., H: 18,8 cm, MIK I 10146. Foto: Iris Papadopoulos